Introduction

Due to changing cultural demands, economic fluctuations, and technology breakthroughs, the global job environment has seen substantial changes in recent years. The food and health sector is one that has drawn more attention because of the growing relevance and scope of the field, which has boosted the need for qualified individuals. The relationship between food, health, and work is especially important when societies deal with problems like healthcare, nutrition, and population well-being.

Because graduate employment in the food and health industry has ramifications for individual career paths as well as the larger societal framework, it has become a topic of discussion and inquiry. There are concerns about whether young professionals' education and experience adequately align with the evolving demands of the industry as they transition from college to the workforce. Graduate employability is shaped by the interaction between academic preparation and the changing demands of the food and health industry, underscoring the need to comprehend the opportunities and difficulties that are unique to this field.

This report aims to explore and analyze the current state of graduate employment within the food and health sector, shedding light on current job opportunities and the factors influencing graduate employability. By identifying job opportunities available to VET Food and Health programme graduates and examining the skills required by employers this study seeks to contribute to the ongoing dialogue on how best to prepare graduates for successful and fulfilling careers in the food and health domain.

The aim of this study was to identify job opportunities available to graduates from Food and Health VET programmes across Ireland, Lithuania, Poland and Cyprus. The list will detail job opportunities available to graduates, and skills and knowledge required for the roles. This will inform VET educators of where graduates have found success and provide real-world examples to allow them to discuss the realities of work with learners on food and health programmes.

Methodology

From the 1st of May to the 31st of September a full search of job opportunities was completed in the food industry across Ireland, Poland, Lithuania and Cyprus. Each partner used job search platforms in their respective countries to identify job opportunities open to graduates from Food and Health VET education programmes. Job search platforms and company websites across the four countries (as seen in Table 1) were used to identify current job positions being advertised. Jobs were identified and data collected if the eligibility criteria for the role included attainment of a Food and/or Health related VET educational qualification.

Table 1- Job search platforms and websites utilised to identify job opportunities

Job Search Websites and Platforms Utilised
Indeed.ie	Cvmarket.lt
Pracuj.pl	Cybankas.lt
Irishjobs.ie	Carierista.com
Ergodotisi.com	LinkedIn
Employment Service under the Ministry of Social Security and Labor of the Republic of Lithuania, State Budget Institution - https://uzt.lt/	Job opportunities advertised on company websites

Over the period of five months, each partner collected data on the jobs identified and took screenshots of each job advertisement for their records. The details from each job advertisement were copied over into an excel spreadsheet categorising the detail into role title; company name; location; part-time/full-time employment; job description; experience requirements; qualification requirements; and salary information.

A total of 383 jobs were identified across Lithuania (n= 117), Ireland (n=73), Poland (n= 60), and Cyprus (n= 133).

Results

A total of 383 job opportunities were identified for graduates from VET Food and Health programmes. Only eight of the opportunities identified were for a part-time role, all other jobs were designated as full-time positions. The job titles identified during the course of the job opportunity search can be seen categorised in Figures 2 (Ireland), Figure 3 (Cyprus), Figure 4 (Lithuania) and Figure 5 (Poland). A full list of the jobs identified can be seen in the Annex attached.

Salary was not reported with all job advertisements. None of the Cyprus job opportunities reported the offered salary. Of the Polish and Irish job advertisements only one third reported the offered salary. However, all Lithuanian job advertisements stated the salary offer associated. Almost all job opportunities identified were for in-person positions within the companies. Only a ten opportunities for hybrid or mobile work were identified amongst the Polish and Irish opportunities.

Along with the qualification requirement, each job advertisement detailed a list of required skills or experience that would be desirable in potential candidates. Over three quarters of job advertisements detailed the desire for applicants to have on average 1-3 years' experience in the area when applying. Other skills desired, depending on the role described, included proficiency in Microsoft Office software packages, computer/IT skills, laboratory competency and experience working in a laboratory setting, data analysis experience, problem solving skills, and good communication skills. Interpersonal skills were mentioned across the majority detailing a desire for applicants to be good team players, have a strong work ethic, be able to keep up in a fast-paced environment, be motivated and driven, a positive attitude to work, and a willingness to learn. The top seven requirements, outside of qualification, can be seen in Figure 6 below.

Discussion

This study has offered a thorough examination of the employment options now open to graduates of VET food and health education programmes. The results highlight how the food and health sector is dynamic and offers opportunity for a wide range of roles and responsibilities. It is clear to graduates navigating the challenging job market that a broad skill set is necessary for success in this diversified field.

For graduates, the study's list of employment options is an invaluable resource as it provides information on new developments and potential growth areas in the food and health industry. An example of the positions that await deserving graduates include those of nutritionist, healthcare administrator, food safety specialist, research and development scientist, culinary specialist, and public health advocate. The industry's broad scope highlights the necessity for continual professional development to keep up with changing demands in addition to offering a variety of career possibilities.

The report also emphasises how crucial it is to match curriculum requirements with business demands in order to improve graduates' readiness for the workforce. Employers, policymakers, and educational institutions are among the industry players who will have a significant impact on how employable graduates will be in the future. Working together, we can close any gaps that may exist between academic preparation and real-world demands, guaranteeing that graduates have the abilities and know-how needed to succeed in their chosen fields.

The employment options for graduates will change along with the food and health industry. The knowledge gained from this research not only offers a quick overview of the situation as it stands today, but it also forms the basis for continuing conversations and projects that promote a flexible and adaptable workforce in this crucial sector. Graduates are encouraged to use this information as a guide when navigating their career paths, understanding that flexibility, lifelong learning, and a proactive approach to skill development will be essential for long-term success in the dynamic job market in the food and health sectors.
